From the Garden to the Market

Come join us on Tuesday, October 24, for a personalized tour of a progressive school garden led by Master Gardener Louisa Cardenas (UCLA retiree) and an insider’s tour of the historical Farmers Market led by Resident Historian, Brett Arena.

The day starts with us bussing from UCLA at 9:00 am to Carthay School of Environmental Studies, which has approximately 10,000 square feet of vegetable, fruit tree, and teaching gardens complete with free-range chickens. The school’s staff, teachers, students, and master gardeners will demonstrate how classroom curriculum translates into garden science and environmental awareness.

We then bus to the neighboring Farmers Market, where we will be on our own to purchase lunch and eat in the Community Room. Once we are done, we will join a tour led by Brett Arena, Farmers Market Historian, providing us with insights into the history of the Gilmore family and the Farmers Market. People who have taken this tour before raved about it!

This will be a very special day, but it is limited to only 30 people, so first come, first served.

The day will run from 10am to 4pm approximately. The cost will be $25 for members and $30 for non-members. Due to the group size restrictions, we ask that you limit guests to only one per person.

Please note there will be some stairs involved in the tour, and due to wandering chickens, you need to wear comfortable shoes that can withstand chicken poop. Also, don’t forget your sunscreen and bring a hat.

We will depart from the UCLA Faculty Center at 9:00 am and return to the Center around 4:00 pm.
